Description

The Belt tenant house is a two-story gable-roofed frame house which stands on the north side of the old road from Leeland to Queen Anne. It is a simple I-house plan, three-bays by one-bay, with central stairhall and a parlor on each side. Entrance is in the central bay of the three bay south facade; the door has a single-pane transom. There is a central cross-gable at second level, with a 6/6 pointed-arch window. There is a jigsawn scallop decoration on the bargeboards at the cross gable and all around the eaves. The south facade is sheltered by a one-story shed roof porch now screened in. The windows are 6/6 double-sash on the first story, and 3/6 on the second, and have plain board surrounds. There is an interior corbelled brick chimney at the ridge. The house is covered with plain board siding on south and east (German siding on north and west) painted white. The trim is painted brown, the roof is of corrugated tin painted red, and the house rests on brick piers infilled with concrete block. At right angles to the main block is a small, one-story gable-roofed (north) kitchen wing, and adjoining this wing on the east is a new one-story concrete block addition. Across the road to the southwest is another small frame gable-roofed tenant house with similar I-house plan, but no central cross gable.

Significance

The Belt Tenant House represents the late nineteenth century settlement at Leeland, part of the extensive landholdings of the Lee and Belt families in central Prince George's County. In the 1870's, after the construction of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad, a small community began to develop around the station nearest to St. Barnabas' Church. As first known as Brick Church Station, the area came to be known as Leeland, after Dr. Benjamin Lee who had owned much of the farmland there. Lee's grandson, Benjamin Lee Belt, was active in the development of the community around Leeland Station; by the 1890's the community included the station, a blacksmith shop, post office and store, as well as several tenant houses, all owned by Benjamin Lee Belt and his mother, Eleanor Lee Belt. The subject house adjoined the blacksmith's shop, and probably was the dwelling of the blacksmith himself. It was typical of late nineteenth century tenant houses, a simple frame I-house. After the death of Benjamin Lee Belt in 1935, his property passed to his brother, W. Seton Belt, who in 1960 devised the land to the Episcopal Church, to be managed by the Mercantile-Safe Deposit and Trust Company of Baltimore. The store, post office and station have been gone for many years, the second tenant house is empty and deteriorating, and only the blacksmith's dwelling has been maintained; it stands today in fairly good condition, as a rental dwelling, the last surviving vestige of the Leeland community.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Belt tenant house is a two-story gable-roofed frame house which stands on the north side of the old road from Leeland to Queen Anne. It is a simple I-house plan, three-bays by one-bay, with central stairhall and a parlor on each side. Entrance is in the central bay of the three bay (main) south facade; the door has a single-pane transom. There is a central cross-gable at second level above the door, filled with a 6/6 pointed-arch window. There is a jigsawn scallop decoration on the barge-boards at the cross gable and all around the eaves. The south facade is sheltered by a one-story shed roof porch now screened in. The windows are 6/6 double-sash on the first story, and 3/6 on the second, and have plain board surrounds.

There is an interior corbelled brick chimney at the ridge. The house is covered with plain board siding on south and east (German siding on north and west) painted white. The trim is painted brown, and there are two-board trellis-type shutters at the windows. The roof is of corrugated tin painted red, and the house rests on brick piers now filled in with concrete block.

At right angles to the main block is a small, one-story gable-roofed (north) kitchen wing, and adjoining this wing on the east is a new one-story concrete block addition. North of the house is a small gable-roofed shed with corrugated tin roof and vertical board siding.

Across the road to the southwest is another small frame gable-roofed tenant house with similar I-house plan, but no central cross gable. This house is empty and in deteriorating condition. Entrance is in the central (but off center) bay of the three-bay east (main) facade. This house has plain board siding painted white, and two-board trellis-type shutters painted red. A brick chimney is centered at the ridge of the red standing-seam tin roof. Bargeboards at the eaves have jigsawn scallop decoration, and jigsawn pendants at the gable ends. The building rests on a brick foundation.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The Belt Tenant House is one of only two buildings surviving from the late nineteenth century settlement at Leeland. This was part of the extensive nineteenth century landholdings of the Lee and Belt families in central Prince George's County. In the 1870's, after the construction of the Pope's Creek line of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad through the County, a small community began to develop around the station nearest to St. Barnabas' Church. As first known as Brick Church Station (after the common local name for St. Barnabas') the area came to be known as Leeland, after Dr. Benjamin Lee, who had owned much of the farmland there. Lee's grandson, Benjamin Lee Belt, was active in the development of the community around Leeland Station; by the 1890's the community included (besides the station) a blacksmith shop, post office and store, as well as several tenant houses, all owned by Benjamin Lee Belt and his mother, Eleanor Lee Belt.<sup>1</sup> (After his marriage in 1882 to Amelia Bowie, daughter of Richard W.W. Bowie, Belt made his home at his wife's family home, Locust Grove at Collington).

The subject house adjoined the blacksmith's shop, and probably was the dwelling of the blacksmith himself. It was typical of late nineteenth century tenant houses, a simple frame I-house. A short time after the blacksmith's house was constructed, another similar tenant house was built a short distance to the southwest, across the Brick Church-to- Queen Anne Road. After the death of Benjamin Lee Belt in 1935, his property passed to his brother, W. Seton Belt, who was his sole heir,<sup>2</sup> and both houses were maintained as tenant dwellings. When Seton Belt died in 1960, he devised the land to the Episcopal Church, to be managed by the Mercantile-Safe Deposit and Trust Company of Baltimore.<sup>3</sup> The second house is now empty and in seriously deteriorated condition. The store, post office and station have been gone for many years. Only the blacksmith's dwelling has been maintained (there appears to be no trace of the blacksmith's shop itself); it stands today in fairly good condition, as a rental dwelling. Directly east of the house, the old road to Queen Anne has been closed, so the blacksmith's house is in a fairly remote, untravelled area, quiet and surrounded by woods. It is a good example of a simple vernacular tenant dwelling of the late nineteenth century, and the last surviving vestige of the Leeland community.
